The Memo Library @ Ledger

Ten investment memos on the companies rebuilding healthcare and money across India and global markets — each one a dated thesis, versioned over time, and scored against what actually happens. Opinions are mine; the discipline is the point.

The Calibration Ledger

Anyone can write a confident memo. The harder thing is to date the call, attach a probability, and let reality grade it. Every prediction below carries a conviction level and a resolution date. Tap a result to see how scoring works.

How it scores: Hit rate counts resolved calls (a Partial counts as a half). The Brier score measures calibration – squared distance between the stated probability and the outcome, where lower is better and a coin-flip guess scores 0.25. Resolved examples are prior calls; open calls grade themselves on their dates.

How to read this library

Verdicts — Buy / Hold / Watch / Pass — describe the call at the current price and moment, not a permanent judgment of the company. Conviction is my own confidence, kept honest by the ledger. Scorecards rate five dimensions on a five-point scale. Every memo is versioned, so you can see how a view changed and why. This is independent work built to think in public — not the position of any employer.
